N E VV E s Sentout of Britayn,

(2

of lune 1 5 9 1. to 2 Gentleman of account.

Concerning the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris, Lozd Concerning the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris (Norris Concerning the kuerall explored the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris (Norris Concerning the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris (Norris Concerning the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris (Norris Concerning the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris (Norris Concerning the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris (Norris Concerning the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris (Norris Concerning the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris (Norris Concerning the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris (Norris Concerning the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris (Norris Concerning the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris (Norris Concerning the kuerall exploits of Sir Iohn Norris (Norris Concerning the kuerall explored the kuerall exploits (Norris Concerning the kuerall explored the kuerall explored the ku

LONDON Printed by Iohn VVolfe, and are to be sold at his shop right ouer against the great South-doore of Paules. 1591.

Newes sent out of Britaine, and other places on the third of Iune, 1,5,9,1, to a Gentleman of account.

H E renowmed Prince d'Ombes Generall of his Maiesties forces in Brittain, being accompanied with the honourable Sir Iohn Norris knight, Lord gouernour of Munster, and generall of hir Maiesties forces in Brittaine, hauing intelligence that within the Citty of Saint Guingan, the which both by nature and Arte, is very strong, there were retired about fiue hundred gentlemen of that Prouince, together with their wives and children, and all their chiefest and most precious wealth, where Sir Iohn Norris thinking to doe great service to the King, much honour to his Queene, and glory to hir countrey, to himselfe and his souldiers a perpetuall praise, and no small prosite if hee could to take such a worthy Citty, hee desired the Prince d'Ombes that hee might give the first affault: which might not bee, for that a most valiant and forward Frenche Captayne had desired it of the Prince before. The which when Sir Iohn A 2

Newes out of Brittaine.

Norris vnderstood, and being perswaded by the Prince was contented, so that if they did not performe what they tooke in hand, that then hee with his Englishmen should proceede. This worthy French Captaine with all the best meanes possible encourageth his fouldiers, who notwithstanding al that euer hee could doe, at the very first before they of the Towne had discharged any thing almost vppon them, began to retire, the which retire grieucd, this worthy Captayn very fore, infomuch that when hee faw he could not by entreaty not otherwise perswade his men to fight, hee with owne hands slewe halfe a dosen of them, in this meane while Generall Norris set forward his men, and this French Captayn worthy all honour, said, let it neuer be saide that I am a Captaine of sheepe, and so dismounted from his horse, and with such weapons as hee had, mingled himselfe with the English souldiers, and so worthely behaued himselfe that he slewe of his enemies with his owne hands about thirty.

There were within the Citty besides the afore sayd Nobility, three hundred excellent and good french souldiers, who together with the Nobility & Townes-men most valiantly desended themselues.

The fight continued three large houres, and longer would have continued if the darkenesse of the night had not ouertooke them.

In the which fight Sir John Norris lost nine worthy Souldiers, and three valiaunt Captaynes, namely Captaine Dennis, Captayne Herne, and Captayn Wolfe

Newes out of Brittaine.

Wolfe, and had about fortie Souldiers hurt, but Captain Wolf they within were in such fort hurt, that the next had size and morning they could not defend themselves halfe an and yet not howre, with such great valure and couragious dead, minde Generall Norris returned vpon them: wheruppon presently they prayed a parley, as halfe determined to render themselves if they might finde any reasonable composition.

The Generall making signe vnto his people, who willingly hearkened vnto him, and having heard them speake, promised to vie them well, if they would freely yeeld themselves to him, the which seemed to them somewhat hard, but yet, fearing they should bee deprived of all they had, and of theyr lives also, saide, that they would willingly doe it, so that hee would not sacke the Cittie, and that hee would suffer the aforesaid Souldiers to depart with their weapons and other furniture, and that they would bee contented to pay them any reasonable summe of money.

The which things were freely and faithfully promised vnto them by Sir Iohn Norris: vppon the which promise the abouesaide Nobilitie most willingly, and of their owne accorde did yeelde themselues, and swore obedience to the King, and promised to withdraw themselues presently every man to his owne house, and to be ready to serve the king in any his businesse.

The Generall was by the Nobilitie fo wel appeafed that he suffered the size hundred French Soul-A 3 diours diours freely to departe according to the agreement and did not require of the Nobilitie but fifteene thousand Crownes, nor of the Citic more then fine and twentie thousand Crowns, a matter of nothing. in respect of which that they themselves did thinke to have paid. So that his demands were thought to be so reasonable of all partes, that they were presently agreede vnto, and most joyfully the Gates were fet open, and they were verie louingly received, and the Generall would not suffer that any the least iniurie should be offered to any of the towne nor Nobilitie, and presently commaunded, that thanks should be yeelded vnto God, the Authour and foreleader of all his victories, as wel as of this though daungerous, yet thanks be given to God, no fuch loffe nor bloodshed as the adversaries had, receaved at that present.

Newes out of Britaine.

The King hauing intelligence, that within the Cittie of Louiers which is foureteene miles from Roan, there was a Corporall that fauoured his Maiestie, and was in great credite with the Gouernour of the same towne called Fontaines Martell. Which Corporall desirous to doe the King some service of importe, practised, that there should be at severall times by six at once, a quantitie of sootemen and horsemen sent into he wood harde adioyning vnto the same Cittie, in the meane time hauing wonne vnto himselfe source or sive Souldiours of his owne company. And his time being come of his watch at noone day, at what time use Gouernour with his brother brother being at dinner, according to his figne giuen, there came about foure score horsemen of the Kings, the which hee espying, went presently up to the Gouernour, who had the keyes lying on the table by him, and faid he maruelled they were folong at dinner, shewing that there were of their friendes come vnto them, who stayed without the gates, and could not enter. Whereupon the Gouernour bade him take the key and let them enter, the which hee did: but there was a fergeant within the towne, who began to suspect the matter, the which this Corporal perceiuing, presently slew, & so let them in, which done he brought them vppe vnto the Gouernour, who tooke him and his brother prisoners, and so became Lords of the towne: in the which towne and meadows about it, there was found foure thousand oxen, and very great store of corne, wine, wood and bacon.

Newes out of Britayne.

This is to be remembred, that the Gouernour aboue mentioned, who was taken prisoner by this meanes, was one of the brauest Souldiours that the Leaguers had in that partes.

It is reported for credite, that the Kings Maiestie is gone to beliege Roan, whereof I hope you shall heare some good newes shortly.

Finis.